

PRODUCT OF THE DAY

Camera

Point-and-shoot digital cameras, with all their megapixels and ultra-portability, are great for snapshots, but can leave the artistically inclined wanting more. If you're seeking something with an avant garde flair, the new DianaF+ from the Lomographic Society may just be the answer. Super saturated colors and random contrasts characterize this reproduction of the original '60's cult classic, which now boasts new features like an electronic flash and panorama function.

Table Linens

Selvedge is a term that's become associated with expensive imported denim these days, but designer Jennifer Pellman has carried over the practice—which is a term for a finished textile construction that won't fray—into her table linen products. The 100% cotton napkins and runners are hand-woven in small batches in Pellman's Madison, Wisconsin studio, and are machine washable.

Postcards

The old adage "It's the thought that counts" was never truer than with these unique wooden post cards by Julie Teninbaum and Drus Dryden. The inset engraving on the cards reads: "Carved by hand with love," all but guaranteeing your communiqué will be received as the thoughtful, extraordinary memo it is. Made from solid wood, the cards are easily etched and ready to post.

Notepad

It's not your lack of creativity that's getting in the way of groundbreaking ideas: It's your notepad that's prohibiting those revelations. The Action Pad from Behance features dedicated areas for action items, ideation sketches, and long-term goals. If that's not enough to elicit inspiration, the pads come in a variety of motivating colors sure to evoke greatness in even the longest of meetings.
